

MANAGING A GLOBAL UNIVERSITY: WHAT DOES IT TAKE?

Erasmus Staff Training Week at Central European University Budapest, April 11-15, 2016

Higher education in Europe is becoming ever more international, with increased mobility of students, faculty, staff, and researchers. Central European University is a truly international institution, with students from nearly 100 countries and faculty from 58, and no dominant nationality. At the Erasmus Staff Training Week, learn best practices in all aspects of international education.

WHAT?

- Trends in internationalization of higher education in Europe
- Experience and best practices in recruiting graduate students from across the globe
- Effective tools for evaluation in admissions
- Promoting a vibrant international student life on campus
- Challenges of international staff recruitment and management
- Collaborative education projects and research partnerships in an international academic environment

ABOUT CEU

Central European University (CEU) is a U.S.- and Hungarian-accredited institution of graduate education specializing in the social sciences and humanities, public policy, and business. Founded in 1991 in Budapest, CEU seeks to contribute to the development of open societies in Central and Eastern Europe, the former Soviet Union, and emerging democracies worldwide through an educational system rooted in the creative, critical, and comparative examination of ideas. CEU is an advanced center of research and policy analysis that facilitates academic dialogue while preparing its graduates to serve as leaders and scholars.
